Cycle's of Faith

31st Sunday in Ordinary Time

The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation is nearly the largest private foundation in the world. With an asset trust endowment of over $34 billion, its reach through grants is truly worldwide. The Gates Foundation is able to provide funding at a level that exceeds the ability of many governments. Education and health initiatives have been the biggest beneficiaries of the foundation's grants. It is estimated that literally millions have benefited, especially children who have been immunized against childhood diseases and families that have been sustained by increased agricultural yields. Despite such stellar performance, there are those who have criticized the foundation or who have rebuked the source of its funding (Gates' profits from Microsoft) as monopolistic.

Not everything is perfect in this world, as this week's Gospel reveals. Zacchaeus is a tax collector, a position in the ancient world reviled for its cooperation with an occupying army. Local tax collectors were often less than savory characters who would occasionally cheat to get ahead, or overcharge to make a little extra on the side. It could be a lucrative position-especially in Jericho, a sizable town-and from the Gospel, it seems that Zacchaeus was making the most of it. The opinion of the Pharisees that Zacchaeus was a sinner was probably the view that most citizens of the town had of him.

After an encounter with Jesus, Zacchaeus had a change of heart. He was intent on doing good with what he had. Like most philanthropies, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation is looking to do good with its assets, propelled by the intent of its founders. We don't need to have $34 billion to help others. All we need is a conversion, a change of heart, to be ready to do good. Whatever small thing we can do each day to help someone puts us in the company of folks like Zacchaeus, open to the saving power of God.
